

UNDERSTANDING REDISTRICTING

How does it work and why does it matter?

What is Redistricting?

Most of our political representatives, from school boards to Congress, are elected by voters who have been sorted into districts. Redrawing the boundary lines for these districts is called redistricting.

Under the U.S. Constitution, redistricting happens about every ten years, after each decade's Census, to adjust the districts and make them roughly equal in population. In North Carolina, elected representatives are authorized to redraw the district lines for their own governmental body. So, school board members draw the school board lines, City Council members draw the city council lines, state legislators in the General Assembly draw the state legislative and Congressional district lines.

How Does Redistricting Affect Me?

The way a district's lines are drawn includes or excludes certain people. These decisions are often made based on party affiliation, race, or other factors, and will affect who gets heard, whose interests are most represented, and who can win the next election.

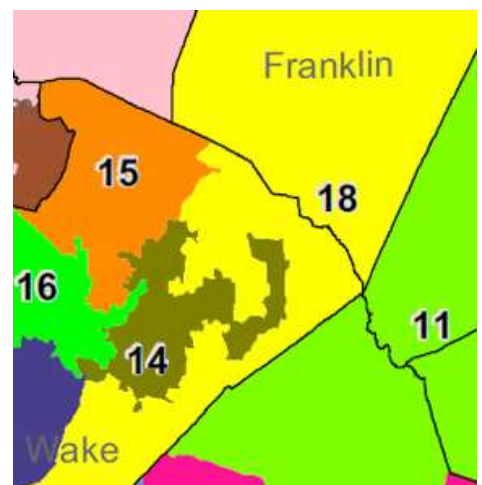

Too often in redrawing districts, elected officials focus on their own re-election rather than the people's interests. Redistricting then becomes a secretive process focused on advancing partisan interests; it becomes a way for politicians to pick their preferred voters and secure their power.

What is Gerrymandering?

Gerrymandering is the deliberate drawing of districts in a way that maximizes the power of the map drawers. Gerrymandering may result in oddly-shaped districts designed to greatly increase or decrease a certain kind of voter (e.g., Black voters or Republican voters). The illustrations below shows how gerrymandering can undercut the will of voters.

Left: Legislators drew Senate District 21 with tentacles that added black voters from Cumberland Co. to make District 19 more white.

Right: Legislators drew District 14 to pull in black voters and make District 18 more white.

How Can We Improve the Redistricting Process?

At Democracy North Carolina, we believe the redistricting process should be open, fair, and participatory. Whether redistricting is conducted by an independent, nonpartisan body or by the state legislature or by using court-ordered standards, any process should:

- Protect voters of color by drawing districts that reflect the requirements of the Voting Rights Act and Equal Protection Clause of the 14th Amendment.
- Invite robust debate from community members, academics, and other stakeholders, and incorporate their feedback in the creation of districts.
- Reject partisan or racial gerrymandering of districts.

What's the Latest on NC's Districts?

- (1) Congressional Districts. In May 2017, the U.S. Supreme Court upheld a lower court's 2016 ruling that the 1st and 12th Congressional district maps were illegally racially gerrymandered. The remedial maps drawn in 2016 by the N.C. General Assembly to "fix" that problem are now being challenged as partisan gerrymandering, i.e., voters were excessively divided and packed into districts based on their party affiliation to benefit one party. The plaintiffs in this challenge, Harris v. Cooper, are asking the U.S. Supreme Court to hear this case, but no decision has been made yet.
- (2) State Legislative Districts. In August 2016, a panel of federal judges ruled that 28 state House and Senate districts were illegal racially gerrymandered; the court ordered the General Assembly to draw new maps in time for a special 2017 election. In North Carolina v. Covington, Republican lawmakers asked the U.S. Supreme Court to overturn the lower court's decision. The U.S. Supreme Court rejected that request on June 5, 2017, and agreed that the 28 districts were racially gerrymandered; however, it told the lower court to hold a new hearing on the appropriate remedy, including possible justification for requiring a special election in 2017 or early 2018.
- (3) Congressional and State Legislative Districts. In another case, plaintiffs in Dickson v. Rucho asked the state courts to rule that the Congressional and General Assembly districts were illegal racially gerrymandered. The N.C. Supreme Court refused, but the U.S. Supreme Court told that court to review the case in light of its decision in an Alabama case about racial gerrymandering. Unmoved, the N.C. Supreme Court re-affirmed its ruling; the Dickson plaintiffs again appealed, and on May 30, the U.S. Supreme Court again remanded the case back to the N.C. Supreme Court to reconsider.

What Can I Do to Promote Fair Redistricting? Visit the Action Hub: demnc.co/fairmaps

- ✓ Sign a petition asking the General Assembly to adopt a nonpartisan redistricting process that will allow voters to pick their representatives, not the other way around. Go to demnc.co/fairmaps17.
- ✓ Talk with your friends, family, and community about the importance of changing the redistricting process. Use this handout and ask people to sign the petition.
- ✓ Organize or join a local group to build support for redistricting reform through canvassing, phone calls, accountability actions with legislators, and showing the film, "Democracy for Sale."

Contact Democracy North Carolina for materials and help with actions or a speaker: 919-286-6000 or info@democracy-nc.org.

June 2017